

National risk scores for H5 bird flu for native birds and mammals

This coversheet contains a link to the table and explanatory information for the table

Link to each table	Description
Risk scores	National risk scores for H5 avian influenza (bird flu) for native species. This analysis considered all native birds and mammals in Australia. This does not include species which have not been reliably observed for many years, such as the buff-breasted button quail, Coxen's fig parrot, and Tiwi Islands hooded robin.
Date of publication	4-Aug-26

Explanatory information

This spreadsheet contains explanatory information for the 'Risk Scores' table. The analysis for birds and analysis for mammals varied in methods to scoring. These definitions, and the risk scores spreadsheet, provide an overview of the approaches to analysing risk.
Taxa group	Identifies if the species belongs to the bird or mammal taxa group.
Family group	Identifies the family group the species belongs to.
Common name	Common name (at the species-level).
Scientific name	Scientific name (Genus name species name).
Susceptibility Score	The likelihood of infection with H5 bird flu and local-level impacts to a species (extreme, very high, high, moderate, low). The susceptibility score considers habitat, diet, group size, dispersal distance, population connectivity (for mammals), reproductive rate and mating behaviour, endemism, and precedence (impacts to similar species overseas).
Conservation status	National listing under the Environment Protection and Biodiversity Conservation Act 1999 (Vulnerable, Endangered, Critically Endangered, Not listed (Blank)). Note that 'Vulnerability' also considered if a species is range restricted and/or has a small population size. Range size and population information have not been provided in this summary table.
National risk score	The national H5 bird flu risk score for a species (extreme, very high, high, moderate, low). This is defined as the estimated relative risk of species level impacts from H5 bird flu. The national risk score is derived from the susceptibility score and vulnerability score of a species.
